

Tara Furlong has over two decades' experience in adult education and training in the private and public sectors in the UK and abroad, specialising in integrated English language, literacies and digital learning. She has been on the Executive Committee of BALID since 2015. She is the Director of Designing Futures Ltd, where achievements include designing and delivering national training modules; named literacy consultant on the Channel 4 adult literacy programme, The Write Offs; and research on the international comparative study, Adult Learning and COVID-19. Tara has been a school governor for a decade and holds further elected community roles in her local area.

Tara has an ongoing interest in the relationship between multi-modal and contextualised versus abstracted learning; its mirror in social and literate practice and language across life spheres; and the function of storytelling in co-ordinating action.
